MOOD: 😊 competent

MUSIC: silence, because we're all trying to eavesdrop on Dad and Pistol Pete in the copy room

O? Do I need to borrow Duke's flask, or are you gonna make it to the concert without chemical assistance?

"To" and "through" are different animals, Kemo Sabe.

Hey, Chaz? Have you heard of a dessert called Floating Island? I wanna make just for the Mad Science-ness (or at least Pulp SF-ness) of the name. But I may have to, um, play with it. Sort of The Floating Island of Doctor Moreau, or something.

Also, have you seen Iron Man yet?

Not only did I see Iron Man, but we talked about it. (I need to work on being more memorable!)

I would eat your Floating Island of Doctor Moreau. It sounds like one of its parents was a trifle, and the other was a chicken. Suitably mad science!

Or I need to comment when I've had more sleep and/or a less frustrating day. You are anything but unmemorable! (Sometimes, I almost suspect that you make self-deprecating comments just so pretty girls will say nice things about you. But noooo, Our Chaz couldn't possibly do that. ;D)

I may have to contemplate things like, I dunno, bacon brittle instead of praline, pineapple caramel instead of plain (not necessarily with the bacon brittle), Interesting Things done the the creme anglaise (I love creme anglaise; I love making it, I love eating it, it is a minor miracle). I wish I could think of something else to do to replace the meringue, because I don't like meringue, but I may have to suck it up and cope. Hm. I could do an Italian meringue instead, and get it nice and crispy. More like a French macaron base. That might work.

In other Mad Food Science projects, I am contemplating playing with agar jelly candies. Starting with Ginger Jellies. If those work, I might try Chai next.

If you suspect I make self-deprecating comments as bait, then I have to confess. I suspect you use food as bait!

I've already admitted to using food as bait. You can't accuse me of it now. (Mental image: a coyote pointing with one paw and shouting, "J'accuse! J'accuse!")

I've also been known to use my long red curls and generous cleavage as bait. Just so you don't get my confuse and "suspect" me of that at some point.

All of this sounds so entirely interesting and also tasty. Crispy meringue would be good, because wasn't Dr. Moreau's island volcanic? Pumice cone = crunchy meringue?

Blue curacao in the creme anglais? No, that would probably be too tacky for words.

Blue curacao would probably be a bit much. Blueberry creme anglaise might work, but that's entirely the wrong color.

Or I could go all-out and make a subtlety out of it... Nah, sculpting meringue does not sound like fun.

Burnt sugar lattice-work as pumice cone? Over a chocolate meringue?

...you're clever. I'll have to make a note.

Dammit, sugar-work.

But the shape does give me a nicely tropical feel that will incorporate the blue curacao and some pineapple in the caramel sauce nicely. Hrm.

*sigh*
